whom she gives her confidence in her most forlorn moments, is always ready with sympathy in assorted styles to suit the occasion. The last expression of understanding feeling was found this morning on the S. R.'s desk, under the title, "The Society Reporter's Lament." Here is is:

Oh the S. R.'s life is not a happy one.
In fact it's full of concentrated woe,
She needs a fairy guide-post that can tell her
Unerringly, where and how far, to go.

Just when she has composed for social dame
Descriptions that should sure clate her,
By some queer rickery of fate.
That dame will call up and berate her.

Oft times she soars in terms exalted, And wonders, "Will my patron stand the stuff?" When, saints above, there comes a messuge, saying, "Good as a sample, but not half enough!"

Fond sister fumed with indignation,
